'Mr. Jefferson's Table' Has Interesting History

"Mr. Jefferson's table," a writing table of light cherry wood, the revolving top bearing a design suggestive of Thomas Jefferson's predilection for octagon and other geometric shapes, graces the apartment of Claudine Hutter, who acquired it when some of the furnishings at Poplar Forest were sold at auction in 1946.

Owned by Jefferson, under whose supervision it reputedly was made at Poplar Forest, the table's patterned top, with the aid of a little imagination, might represent the building's plan. It came into the Hutter family when William Cobbs, great-grandfather of the present owner, acquired Poplar Forest and some of its furnishings about 1828, approximately two years after Jefferson's death in 1826.

The late Christian S. Hutter, father of Miss Hutter, left a written record of the piece to provide permanent proof of its authenticity. When Poplar Forest articles were sold at auction two weeks after James Owen Watts Jr. in 1946, purchased the place at which he now lives, Miss Hutter bought the table. She paid $1,325 for it against strong competition from other bidders attending the sale.

articles not moved away by members of the family. These included other Jefferson pieces but the table, which had not been used for years, was sold to Mr. Harris for 50 cents!

In 1891, he called on Mr. Hutter and said he owned "something" that Mr. Hutter should have and that Mr. Hutter owned "something" that he must have. He offered then to exchange this table (which brought $1,325 more than 50 years later) for two tons of coal. The exchange was made and the table, still not in pristine condition, was returned to Poplar Forest where it was stored for a long time in the attic. Some years later, it was brought out and polished up. Today it is a beautiful and rare piece of furniture.

One hundred years after it was acquired by the Poplar Forest owners in 1828, the plantation in 1928 was the scene of pageantry staged by Lynchburg organizations in observance of Virginia Day. Each organization had a scene from Virginia history to depict and the Colonial Dames elected to portray "Dolly Madison's tea party." In this scene, Miss Ella Henry Miller, great great granddaughter of Patrick Henry, poured tea at "Mr. Jefferson's table," one of the effective events of the day.

The table, originating at Poplar Forest, then a visitor in the nearby Harris home for 14 years, then returned to Poplar Forest where it remained for nearly 60 years longer, was used each summer when Hutters went out for the season.

Mr. Jefferson's "dumb wait" which he used at Poplar Forest, now owned by Edwin Christy Hutter of Charlottesville, to which it was conveyed by the late Malcolm Griffin in his will. Mr. Griffin whose mother, born at Poplar Forest, was the former Nannie Hutter, wife of Major Samuel Griffin Bedford, inherited it through her. Various other pieces of Jefferson origin are owned among the descendants of William Cobbs.

Mr. Hutter, who went to Bellevue to school after his parents' death, came to Lynchburg early in his life and in the late 1880's established the business which still bears his name and is conducted now by members of his family. But he kept Poplar Forest in the family until it was sold in 1946 to the present owner.

There is a pretty little story preserved in Mr. Hutter's handwriting about the table: "Mr. Jefferson's table," he states, "was exchanged for two tons of coal in 1891." Fred Harris of Winston, a neighbor of the Hutter family, had purchased the table in 1877 when the Hutters closed Poplar Forest after the death of Mr. and Mrs. Hutter, parents of Christian S. Hutter. Friends in the neighborhood bought some of the articles not moved away by members of the family. These included other Jefferson pieces but the table, which had not been used for years, was sold to Mr. Harris for 50 cents!
